

Financial Journalist

dealReporter, a real time news service owned by the Financial Times Group, is seeking a financial journalist to join its London-based team.

We're looking for an experienced financial reporter with proven ability to break big stories or have had internships with major newswires.

The role is focused on investigating high profile large cap corporate activity including mergers and acquisitions, spin offs and cash calls. This position would suit a candidate looking to move into entirely off-diary investigative journalism.

The main qualities we are looking for are enthusiastic, persistent reporters who are keen to compete with the nationals on high profile situations, like Sanofi's bid for Genzyme and Kraft's acquisition of Cadbury.

The right candidate will either have a bulging contact book or have the ability to track down and build relationships with senior dealmakers.
